Sunday : : : : : : : : : : : April 1, 1866 We have been suffering for about a week under a severe attack of the mails. Monday morning found us down with about six-score papers, which any doctor, skilled in the treatment of the complaint, would pronounce a well developed case. Daily, since that time, we have disposed of twenty or thirty of them ; but our readers must not suppose that we have succeeded in presenting them daily with the concentrated extract of a score or two of our exchanges. Far from it-three-fourths of the material which we have raked, culled and filtered, still hangs in accumulating festoons, like the grey moss of our forests, from divers hooks, or dangles its extremities, like a little boy in papa's chair, from several pigeon-holes. But this is not the worst of the case-every day has brought an posed to deal unfairly with him. accession of from fifty to seventy sheets, causing a severe relapse, and offering for solution the problem; more abstruse than that of the frog in the well, when shall we reach the bottom of the pile? At the time of writing symptoms are more favorable, the morning mail not having brought more than twenty-nine papers and none of them of an earlier date than the 23rd-the 20th is the oldest date we have reached in four days. Thus, in Chicago staple and fancy dry goods constitute the leading line, while in Cincinnati groceries are the most prominent. In our own fair Crescent City—the pride and hope of every true Southerner—the drug interest rivals all others in extent, although all the licensed by His Honor, Judge Watts, groceries are the most prominent. In our rivals all others in extent, although all the eading branches of commerce and merchanare prominently represented by sagacious and enterprising mer-chants. In New Orleans not less than twelve large importing and wholesale Court had no jurisdiction to grant a writ drug houses are engaged in remunerative trade, and this patronage, we learn from reliable sources, is steadily and constantly in-Evans presented the motion and as- creasing. This increase of trade is of course not only due to the commanding position of the city, but to the enterprise, liberality and sagacity of the merchants themselves. limits of our article forbid a detailed mention of these houses, and we will, therefore, the statute, and as such there is no law at this time mal allusion to only one of the most promine a, that of James Gonegal, lately removed from the old and well known writ for a free negro, or even for the stand, corner of Common and Magazine streets, to a new location, No. 20 St. Charles street. This new establishment is as substantial and well adapted to the trade as it s attractive in appearance and desirable in ocation. Mr. Gonegal's trade extends as far as transportation facilities will admit. while there is hardly a druggist within the limits of several adjacent States, who has not established direct and satisfactory relations with him. Carrying at all times mammoth stock of every conceivable kind and character of goods belonging to his line, and uniting with this a schedule of slave, for he could maintain a writ of prices which just to himself, yet, as Habeas Corpus then by his master, but, we are told, averages much below that isually exacted, he makes it to the pecuniary advantage of every druggist purchase their supplies at That he can easily do this, and yet realize a handsome profit on his stock, is readily explained by the fact that his relations both at the North and in Europe, with maunfacturers and importers, are direct; and, buying in large quantities, he thereby saves the commission made by a second middle party, which commission he is en-
